We made sure we didn't remove plants that provide fruits and nuts for the wild animals that live near us.

We prefer native plants for the wildlife, but we also planted some non-native plants such as azaleas for beauty.

For easier maintenance and to conserve water, we grouped our trees instead of spreading them out.