Sequoia National Forest

Hume Lake Ranger District

The Jennie Lakes Wilderness is located in the southeast corner of the Hume Lake Ranger District. With most of the 10,500 acres lying above 7,000 feet, Jennie Lakes Wilderness contains scenic variations of alpine and sub-alpine forests, lakes, streams and meadows. Vegetation includes red fir, lodgepole pine, western white pine and a large variety of wildflowers in the spring and early summer. The summit of Mitchell Peak is the highest point at 10,365 feet which provides grand vistas of the High Sierra. Jennie Lakes Wilderness borders Kings Canyon National Park to the east and Sequoia National Park to the south.

Access to Jennie Lakes Wilderness from Fresno is approximately 70 miles. Take State Highway 180 east into King's Canyon National Park and through the Big Stump Entrance Station. After the station turn right onto the Generals Highway/ Hwy 198 and continue for 7 miles, turn left on Big Meadows Forest Road (14S11) for access to most wilderness trailheads, or continue east on Hwy 198 for 5 miles to Upper Stony Creek trailhead.

Trails

Four trailheads provide 26 miles of hiking trails within Jennie Lakes Wilderness. Three trailheads are off of Big Meadows Forest Road (14S11) and one is off of General's Highway/ Hwy 198. Several of the trails also connect to Sequoia & Kings Canyon National Park backcountry. Visitors can enjoy a two or three-day backpack trip accessing both Jennie Lakes and Weaver Lakes from any of these trailheads. The most popular route begins at Big Meadows trailhead, but there are other access points that help reduce parking congestion. Because of the high altitude of Jennie Lakes Wilderness, access in the winter is limited due to winter road closure and the steep snow-covered terrain. Advanced backcountry navigation and winter survival skills are highly recommended during winter outings.
