HIKING: The Cheat Ranger District manages 160.8 miles of trail; 36.8 miles in Otter Creek, and 124 miles of non-wilderness trails. Otter Creek Wilderness party size is limited to 10 people, and mechanized equipment and vehicles are prohibited. Many trails outside the designated wilderness area are suited for hiking, mountain biking, skiing, and horseback riding. Local weather information can be obtained from a National Weather Service recorded message in Elkins, WV at (304) 636-5000.

Several handouts for circuit hikes are available at no charge from the district office. They are: Canaan Mountain Backcountry, Horseshoe Run Area, Otter Creek Wilderness, and Pheasant Mountain.

More detailed hiking information can be found in the Monongahela National Forest Hiking Guide, 6th Edition, by Allen de Hart and Bruce Sunquist. The Visitor's Center in Elkins, and several retail outlets in the Elkins and Davis areas, sell the hiking guide.

CAMPING: Three developed campgrounds are located on the district. Camping reservations may be made for Horseshoe and Stuart Recreation Areas up to five days in advance. Call the USFS Reservation Center at (877)444-6777 or TTY/TDD (877)833-6777 for reservation information. Information is also available on the Internet at www.ReserveUSA.com.

FERNOW EXPERIMENTAL FOREST

In 1934 a portion of forest, which would eventually become the Monongahela National Forest, was recognized as representative of much of the timberland in West Virginia and adjacent states in topography, history of cuttings, climate, and variety of species. It was set aside for research use and designated the Fernow Experimental Forest in memory of Bernhard E. Fernow, a pioneer in American forestry research. The experimental forest, with recent land acquisitions from the Monongahela National Forest, now totals approximately 4,700 acres.

This project of the USDA Forest Service is headquartered at the Timber and Watershed Laboratory, which is collocated with the Cheat Ranger District, in Parsons, WV.
