The Trail

The Pacific Crest Trail National Scenic Trail extends 2,600 miles from Canada to Mexico. It passes through 23 National Forests, including several Wilderness areas, 7 National Parks, other federal lands, and numerous portions of state, local government and private lands.

In California the trail begins at the California-Oregon border south of Observation Peak in the Siskiyou Mountain Range and ends at the Mexican Border near Campo.

From the north, the Pacific Crest Trail enters the Eldorado National Forest in Desolation Wilderness. It continues south jogging back and forth between the Lake Tahoe Basin Management Unit and the Toiyabe and Eldorado National Forests.

Designated access points are located at Norden on Interstate 80, Echo Lake on Highway 50, Carson Pass on Highway 88, and Ebbetts Pass on Highway 4.

The entire Pacific Crest Trail is closed to all types of vehicles, including bicycles.

Permits

A permit is not required on the Pacific Crest Trail as such, but a permit is required for travel through Wilderness and other special areas. A Campfire Permit is required for portable campstoves or for building campfires in wildlands. Check with the local areas to ensure that campfires are allowed. Many wilderness areas like Desolation Wilderness do not allow campfires.

Pacific Crest Trail permits are issued by the agency at which point the traveler enters the trail. Thus the Forest Service will issue permits for trips originating on National Forests, and the Park Service will issue permits for trips starting in National Parks. The permit will cover the entire trip. For trips originating on the Eldorado National Forest, Pacific Crest Trail permits may be obtained by contacting the Pacific Ranger District.

Travelers passing through the Desolation Wilderness on the Pacific Crest Trail are not subject to the quota system or a fee. Short trips with Desolation as the primary visited area is not considered a PCT permit and is subject to fees and quotas.

California Campfire Permits may be obtained at National Forest, Bureau of Land Management or California Department of Forestry offices. Please check locally before starting your trip to see if any special restrictions are in effect anywhere along your planned route.
