Historic Fullerton Sawmill & Town

Fullerton Louisiana

The Fullerton story begins in 1890 when the Wright-Blodgett Lumber Company of Illinois purchased large tracts of pine timberlands in Vernon parish. With the coming of the railroad in 1897 the Gulf Lumber Company bought 106,000 acres of previously inaccessible Wright-Blodgett lands southeast of Leesville, Louisiana at a cost of $6,000,000 in 1905. In 1906, S.H. Fullerton, president of the Gulf Lumber Company, decided to organize a mill located 6 miles north of Pitkin, Louisiana which would bear his name. The Fullerton site appealed to the Gulf Lumber Company as the ideal location for their mill site because of its abundance of oaks & spring-fed streams. Active operations of the mill began in March of 1907. Throughout its twenty-year existence, the mill was in operation day & night. However in 1927 the mill closed & became an abandoned mill town as the Gulf Lumber Company moved west. During its span, Fullerton had become the largest pine sawmill west of the Mississippi River & the second largest in the South.

Fullerton~the Town

Fullerton, Louisiana (pop. 2,500-5,000) was named after its owner S.H. Fullerton. The town existed from 1907 to 1927, during which time the town had a hospital, dentist, commissary, café, post office, drug store, barber shop, public telephones, bank, feed store, Ford dealership, & even a jail. Modern living quarters were furnished by the company for a fee. These homes had electricity & indoor plumbing.

Company Housing

Fullerton~the People

Community life included a “motion picture show” (theatre), dance pavilion, town band, baseball & basketball team, Boy Scout troop, & a public swimming pool. Fullerton also had an elementary & high school. Religious life was centered around both Protestant & Catholic churches & their related service organizations.

Commissary

Fullerton~the Mill

Activities in Fullerton were regulated by the steam whistle of the mill. The days started & ended with a whistle as it announced the beginning & ending of the work day. One unique feature of Fullerton was that the employees were paid with cash, not paper script or tokens as did most mills. Also, Fullerton had the only alcohol plant in LA where wood chips & sawdust were converted into alcohol.
