Pacific Southwest Region

Wilderness permits are required for entry into many of the wilderness areas located on National Forests in California. Permits help the Forest Service to manage the wilderness by tracking visitor use patterns. In some areas, visitor quotas and trailhead quotas are in effect to protect the wilderness area from visitor impacts and overuse. Wilderness permits are free to anyone who will follow certain rules intended to protect both the visitor and the wilderness resource. A separate wilderness permit is required for each trip. A group camping together and traveling together need only one permit.

Fires—ground, wood and charcoal are PROHIBITED in the San Mateo Canyon Wilderness. Fuel and gel stoves are permitted during general fire restrictions.

Obtaining your overnight permit

Wilderness permits are issued at Forest Service Ranger District offices and sometimes at Ranger Stations near trailheads. To obtain your permit by mail or fax, complete this application and mail or fax it to the Trabuco Ranger District office listed above. For other wilderness areas, refer to the brochure Wilderness on the National Forests in California. Some offices allow you to make permit arrangements by phone, including after-hours pickup. Permits are issued on a first-come first-served basis. The National Forests you plan to visit will have complete information.

USDA is authorized to obtain certain information under Section 515 of the Treasury and General Government Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (Public Law No. 106-554, codified at 44 U.S.C. 3516, note). Information is needed by USDA to process the request and initiate follow-up contact with the requestor if required. Requestors should not send USDA their Social Security Number. Requestors are advised they do not have to furnish the information but failure to do so may prevent the request from being processed. The information requestors furnish is almost never used for any purpose other than to process and respond to the request. However, USDA may disclose information to a congressional office in response to an inquiry made on behalf of the requestor, to the Department of Justice, a court or tribunal when information is relevant and necessary to litigation, or to a contractor or another Federal Agency to help accomplish a function related to this process.
