Mineral Material Collection for Landscape Rock

Beaverhead-Deerlodge National Forest

Each year many homeowners work to transform their yards using rock as a form of decorative landscaping material. National Forests have a variety of rock materials available for free collection. However, there are a few things you need to know before you collect your landscaping rocks.

You will be required to obtain a free use permit before collecting rock. Your permit will allow you to collect up to two short tons per year for personal landscape rock collection only. This is approximately four pickup loads.

You can collect your rock by hand picking only with little or no disturbance to the ground, other resources and environment. No motorized equipment is allowed for collecting. While collecting, be courteous to other visitors by keeping the roadways clear. Park up to one vehicle length off roads.

Be advised that it is illegal to collect archaeological artifacts, such as arrowheads, old bottles, and other historic artifacts on National Forest lands.

Collecting rock is not allowed in the following areas:

- ◆ Wild and Scenic River corridors
- ◆ Historical or archeological sites
- ◆ Campgrounds
- ◆ Wilderness Areas
- ◆ Administrative sites
- ◆ Areas “withdrawn” from mineral entry

Stop in at your local Forest Service office to obtain your free use permit and for information related to good areas to collect landscaping rock.
