Smith River National Recreation Area

Welcome Campers! Discover a very special place in the Smith River National Recreation Area (NRA) in northwest California. NRA campgrounds are along or near the picturesque Smith River, renowned for its crystal green waters and rugged rock canyons. The area abounds in scenic beauty: Redwood National and State Parks are close by and the Siskiyou Wilderness and Pacific Ocean are within 20 miles. This 305,337 acre National Recreation Area (NRA) was designated by Congress in November 1990 to protect the area's special scenic value, natural diversity, cultural and historical attributes, wilderness, wildlife, fisheries, and the Smith River watershed's clean waters. The Forest Service has been designated as the steward of the NRA to provide recreational opportunities and to manage this diverse area for all of its valuable resources.

This brochure describes primitive camping, developed campgrounds, and tips to ensure a pleasant camping experience. Detailed forest maps showing campgrounds, picnic areas, lakes, rivers and streams, roads and trails, may be purchased by mail, online or at any Six Rivers National Forest Office.

Weather in the Smith River NRA is very changeable. Temperatures in the winter may drop into the 30's and 40's with occasional snow. The rainy season normally runs from October through April with an average annual rainfall of 90+ inches. Summers are dry with warm 80-100° temperatures. For current weather information, call the Smith River NRA.

Recreational opportunities abound in the Smith River NRA. The beautiful Smith River offers fishing for steelhead, trout, and salmon. During the summer months, the pure, clear waters of the Smith River are perfect for swimming, rafting, or fishing and the forested mountainsides present occasions for hiking, bird watching, wildflower walks, or perhaps just lounging in the sun.

Campfire permits are not required within developed campgrounds and picnic areas; however, campfires are allowed only in designated fire pits. Permits are necessary if you plan to build a campfire or use an outdoor camp stove, gas lantern, or barbecue away from a developed campground. Permits are free and can be obtained at any Forest Service office.

PLEASE do not feed bears or other wildlife either intentionally or accidentally. Bears and other critters ordinarily become problems in campgrounds only when visitors are careless with food storage. Most large mammals avoid anything smelling like humans, but bears are an exception. Bears recognize ice chests (ICE CHEST = FOOD) and can rip a window right off a car to get to an ice chest! Store food items in the vehicle's trunk or inside the car. Car windows should be closed and food items covered to limit visibility to curious creatures. Bears consider all products with an odor as food: toothpaste, sun-tan lotion, insect repellent, even chewing gum should be properly stored. Along the trail, hang food from a line or tree branch at a minimum height of 12 feet to help safeguard your edibles.

Pets are welcome on the NRA. Pets must always be on a leash while in developed recreation sites. Please clean up after all pets, dispose of the waste properly, and be considerate of other campers.

Water that seems crystal clear can contain harmful microorganisms such as bacteria, viruses, Giardia, and Cryptosporidium. Most developed campsites provide safe drinking water; however, remote sites without water will require visitors to bring their own. Water taken from above-ground sources such as lakes, springs, rivers, and streams should be purified prior to drinking. Treatment methods include boiling, mechanical filtration/purification; exposing to UV light, and adding chemicals (iodine, chlorine).
