Beginning in August of 1943, the military used the area for maneuvers and mountain training for World War II. Many of the artillery and mortar shells shot into the area for practice still exist. In 1997, a highly trained crew surveyed the trail locations and known campsites for shells. They found 15, some of which were still live. All were exploded on site. Many more may exist and they are dangerous. Since it is impossible to survey every acre of the wilderness, we ask that you follow the recommendations below for your own safety.

- Stay on designated trails.
- Do not create new trails
- Camp at existing campsites. These usually have a fire ring and show bare ground around them.
- If you camp at a place without a fire ring DO NOT create one. Use a backpacker-type stove for your cooking needs and enjoy a night without a campfire.

If you find an Unexploded Ordnance

- Do not touch, move or dig near or around the suspected ordinance.
- Identify the area on a map or by terrain feature. On the ground, from a distance away, you can point out the location by making an arrow using rocks or sticks, or hanging a bandana.
- Walk away in the direction you came.
- Immediately contact the Forest Service: Cheat-Potomac Ranger District, Peters burg Monday-Friday 304 257-4488 Monongahela National Forest Weekends, after hours 888 283-0303

Trail System:

Dolly Sods Wilderness has 47 miles of trails, many of which follow old railroad grades and logging roads. Listed below are several possible loop hikes. Fords indicate streams that may be a problem to cross during high water events. There may be additional small stream crossings.

- Practice Leave No Trace outdoor ethics: do not build a camp within 200 feet of roads, streams and trails.
- Trails can be muddy and wet so be prepared to get your feet wet.
- Dress for the weather. Be prepared for sudden changes.
- Wear proper footwear.
- Bring drinking water; otherwise, treat water from streams and trails. Hikers are encouraged to wear high visibility clothing.
