APPENDIX B – FOREST PLAN MANAGEMENT DIRECTION IN ROADLESS AREAS; PROPOSED ACTION UPPER TIER ACRES

INTRODUCTION

The management direction in forest plans guides the development, planning, and implementation of proposed actions on national forest system (NFS) land. Forest plans contain forest wide direction as well as direction specific to each allocated management area. Management area direction typically defines management practices and land uses to be emphasized on NFS lands within that management area, as well as the activities that are limited or prohibited within the area. Management direction may be expressed in the form of desired conditions or goals, as well as standards and guidelines.

Standards are defined as courses of action or levels of attainment required to achieve the desired conditions, and are mandatory. Guidelines are defined as preferred or advisable courses of action or levels of attainment designed to meet the desired conditions. If deviation from a guideline or desired condition is determined to be necessary, the rationale must be documented during the project-level environmental analysis. The inventoried roadless areas (IRAs) and Colorado roadless areas (CRAs) overlap many different management areas, and management area allocations are variable among the forest plans.

Alternatives 1, 2, and 4 (the 2001 Roadless Rule provisions, the Colorado Roadless Rule, and Alternative 4 with Public Proposed Upper Tier) generally prohibit road construction and reconstruction as well as tree cutting, sale, or removal in roadless areas other than under specific exceptional circumstances. Under these alternatives, where forest plan direction regarding road construction or tree cutting activities in a roadless area is more restrictive than the applicable roadless rule, the forest plan direction would apply. Refer to chapter 2 – Alternatives for details about these alternatives.

Alternative 3 does not involve any roadless rule-related prohibitions on road construction or tree cutting activities in the IRAs. Under this alternative, the forest plan direction governs those land use activities in IRAs. Refer to chapter 2 – Alternatives, for details about this alternative. Forest plan direction is subject to change through amendment or revision processes, as described in chapter 2 of this EIS.

As a step of analysis, management area direction from each forest plan was categorized in terms of its restrictions or permissions on road construction and tree cutting activities. These management categories are used throughout this appendix.

Road construction categories are defined by the letters A through D:

A – Roads prohibited (except reserved and outstanding rights)

B – Roads generally restricted by desired conditions or guidelines

Roadless Area Conservation; National Forest System Lands in Colorado

C - Roads generally not restricted except under some specific circumstances (limited by specific language or road density requirements)

D - Roads not restricted

Tree cutting categories are defined by numbers 1 through 4:

- 1 - Tree-cutting prohibited (except incidental)
- 2 - Tree-cutting generally restricted by desired conditions or guidelines
- 3 - Tree-cutting generally not restricted except for regulated commercial timber purposes
- 4 - Tree-cutting not restricted

Categories A through D for road construction and 1 through 4 for tree cutting were combined into 10 management categories of forest plan direction described in table B-1. The specific language from each forest plan management area regarding road construction and tree cutting is in a document in the EIS record. The alternative 3 map in the map packet displays this information as it applies to the IRAs.

D3	Not restricted	Generally not restricted except for regulated commercial timber purposes
D4	Not restricted	Not restricted

Table B-2 lists forest plan management area names and numbers, from each of the eight forest plans for national forests in Colorado. It also shows the management category for road construction and tree cutting associated with that forest plan management area. The table includes all forest plan management areas, although they are not all represented within IRAs or CRAs. The same management area name may be common to several forest plans even though the associated management category for road construction and tree cutting may differ in each forest plan.

Table B-3 lists the acres in each management category for road construction/reconstruction and tree-cutting activities (categories A1 to D4) associated with each IRA on each national forest. Acres are rounded to the nearest 100 acres. There are approximately 4.24 million acres in IRAs, common to alternatives 1 and 3 (refer to appendix A for details on acres included in IRAs).

Table B-4 lists a summary of the acres in each management category for road construction and tree-cutting activities (categories A1 to D4) associated with IRAs on each national forest. Acres are rounded to the nearest 100 acres. There are approximately the 4.24 million acres in IRAs under alternatives 1 and 3 (refer to appendix A for details on acres included in IRAs).

Table B-6 lists a summary of the acres in each management category for road construction and tree-cutting activities (categories A1 to D4) associated with CRAs on each national forest. Acres are rounded to the nearest 100 acres. There are approximately the 4.19 million acres in CRAs under alternatives 2 and 4 (refer to appendix A for details on acres included in CRAs).

Roadless Area Conservation; National Forest System Lands in Colorado

Table B-7 shows the differences between IRA acres (for alternatives 1 and 3) and CRA acres (for alternatives 2 and 4) by forest plan management area name, number, and associated management category (see Table B-1 and B-2) for road construction and tree-cutting activities. These differences are displayed separately for each forest. For each management area listed, the last three columns show the associated IRA acres, CRA acres, and the net difference (change) from IRA to CRA. Where acres are not included in the roadless area for the particular alternative, forest plan management direction applies.

Table B-8 shows upper tier acres that are in Alternative 2 for the four National Forests that have completed forest plan revisions. Colorado Roadless Area upper tier acres are specific portions of or entire Colorado Roadless Areas that are identified in the set of forest roadless area maps maintained at the national office of the U.S. Forest Service. All road construction or reconstruction is prohibited on these acres except where needed pursuant to reserved or outstanding rights or as provided for by statute or treaty. Tree-cutting, sale, or removal is prohibited except for incidental to the implementation of a management activity not otherwise prohibited and as appropriate for personal or administrative use. Only CRAs with the upper tier acres are displayed.

Tables B-9 and B-10 show upper tier acres in alternative 2 for the two National Forests that have not yet completed forest plan revisions. Colorado Roadless Area upper tier acres are specific portions of or entire Colorado Roadless Areas that are identified in the set of forest roadless area maps maintained at the national office of the U.S. Forest Service. All road construction or reconstruction is prohibited on these acres except where needed pursuant to reserved or outstanding rights or as provided for by statute or treaty. Tree-cutting, sale, or removal is prohibited except for incidental to the implementation of a management activity not otherwise prohibited and as appropriate for personal or administrative use. These acres are in addition to the upper tier acres listed in Table B-8. Only the CRAs with the additional upper tier acres are displayed.
