

Moderate productivity
ponderosa pine site in Zuni Mountains of New Mexico.

Trees were retained in both clumps and isolated individuals.

Even the clumps received some degree of thinning and sanitation.

Clumps are best defined by their interlocking or touching crowns.

Individual clumps are usually comprised of one single size class and can be as large as two to three acres and as small as 1/10 to 1/4 acre.

