

TO: U.S. FOREST SERVICE

As a concerned Virginian, I write in support of more jobs & the safe development of natural gas resources in the George Washington National Forest.

Because horizontal drilling can be done safely and with minimal environmental impact, I do not support the proposed federal ban on horizontal drilling in the GW National Forest. The U.S. Forest Service should not close the door on the potential that shale gas has to strengthen America's energy security for generations, while creating jobs and growing our economy. Horizontal drilling is a recognized way to produce this gas safely without disturbing large surface areas. With proper government regulation and oversight and use of industry best practices, directed at protecting our water resources, we can safely produce the energy America needs.

Sincerely,
