A Curriculum Guide

Dear Teacher:

The Great Fire of 1910 and the Pulaski Story are important events in the history of the State of Idaho, the Northwest, and the Nation. These fascinating, though tragic, events deserve ample coverage in the teaching of Idaho history.

This curriculum guide provides a range of options for teaching about The Great Fire of 1910. Activities can be chosen to fit teaching methods and student learning style. Other activities may be adapted to blend these topics with the Idaho history curriculum.

Visit <http://www.fs.usda.gov/attmain/ipnf/specialplaces> for more information about the Pulaski Tunnel Trail, the Great Fire of 1910 and a link to the curriculum materials.

This packet of materials was developed by two Idaho teachers who have a personal interest in the Pulaski Tunnel Trail that is located very near their home town of Wallace, Idaho.

Dan Fritz attended school in Wallace and nearby Mullan School Districts. He is a graduate of the University of Idaho and has two years of teaching experience in the Tuluksak School in the Yupiit School District in rural Alaska. He is currently teaching third and fourth grades in the Mullan School District. He experienced intern teaching at Spirit Lake Elementary in the Lakeland School District and Fernan Elementary in the Coeur d'Alene School District. He has taught fourth grade at Pinehurst Elementary in the Kellogg School District.

Jim See is a retired Guidance Counselor from the Mullan School District. He also taught Television Production in Mullan for twenty years. Jim is the President of the Pulaski Project. The Pulaski Project played a significant role in the restoration of the Pulaski Tunnel Trail and the recreation of the Pulaski Tunnel.

With a Teacher Incentive Grant from the Idaho Humanities Council, these educators were able to provide you with tools to teach the significance of The Great Fire of 1910 and the Pulaski Story to Idaho history and indeed, the history of the United States.

By presenting the legacy of the past to our youth, you pass on a lesson that enriches the individual by connecting them to a history that has affected their lives and will continue to do so into the future.
